FUN Technologies Becomes the Official BlackBerry Tournament Skill-Based Games Provider for Users

Development Program with Research In Motion Expands Global Access to FUN ARCADE's Popular Tournament Action

TORONTO, November 13, 2006 – FUN Technologies Inc. ("FUN" or the "Company"), one of the world's leading online and interactive casual games providers, announced today that its wholly-owned subsidiary, SkillJam Technologies ("SkillJam"), is working with Research In Motion (RIM) to develop a series of tournament skill-based games for BlackBerry® users. SkillJam is "The Official BlackBerry Tournament Skill-based Games Provider."

SkillJam will initially develop four (4) of FUN ARCADE's popular mobile tournament games for the BlackBerry® 7100 Series and BlackBerry® 8700 Series handsets. The games will be customized to optimize BlackBerry functionality and provide users with a fun and rewarding mobile game experience. Users will have access to skill games directly on their BlackBerry handset along with the ability to participate in mobile network tournaments. This technological development marks the expansion of SkillJam's tournament community to include players on online and mobile platforms.

SkillJam is the leading multi-channel provider of skill-games technology. SkillJam develops and distributes skill-games solutions across online, mobile and iTV platforms, while providing a host of private-label games solutions for a broad network of partner destination sites in the U.S. and abroad, including AOL Games, MSN Games and Virgin Games.

"Working with RIM – a leader in mobile communications with global relationships – is an exciting and significant development in FUN's expansion strategy in the mobile marketplace," said Lorne Abony, CEO of FUN Technologies. "Providing BlackBerry users turn-key access to optimized versions of FUN ARCADE's popular games gives casual games fans around the world the ability to compete in exciting new ways – wherever and whenever they want."
